Thirteen States File Suit Against National Health Care Law

Statement by Attorney General Henry McMaster

Columbia, S.C. – South Carolina Attorney General Henry McMaster today issued the following statement:

"Today, South Carolina has joined twelve other states in filing a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the national health care law signed by President Obama.

The key question involved is whether personal freedom, state sovereignty, and constitutional law will survive in America for future generations.

A legal challenge by the States appears to be the only hope of protecting the American people from this unprecedented attack on our system of government."
